microfacies are present in 14 measured sections within the Sinbad Limestone. Lateral variation is most pronounced in the upper part of the basal limestone where storm-deposited beds pinch out over a lateral distance of one kilometer. Otherwise, individual beds and microfacies display a large degree of lateral homogeneity and regional persistence.

Abstract. With the aid of sedimentological as well as paleoecological data, the microfacies types of limestone of various ages can be combined into major types which reflect the depositional and ecological conditions in a certain sedimentary environment. This concept, which was developed on Upper Triassic reef carbonates in...

Thin section analyses were used to determine sedimentary and diagenetic features of the limestones. Determination of microfacies was based on fossil assemblages and carbonate classification according to Dunham (1962) and the expanded classification of Embry and Klovan (1971). With regard to deposition, either on the passive margin of the Indian continent or on the active margin of the Asian continent, microfacies types were prefixed P (e.g., P1) for passive and A (e.g., A1) for active margin.
